

Improving the health of the public by 2040

Starting the transformation in educating the health professionals of the future

3 July 2017

10.00–16.00

Woburn House
Tavistock Square
London

Improving the health and well-being of the public and the quality of care for patients are priorities for all, and require a paradigm shift in how we work.

As some of the people responsible for guiding and delivering education for future health professionals we have the opportunity, and responsibility, to start making a real difference.

In response to the publication of the Academy of Medical Sciences report, Improving the Health of the Public by 2040, key organisations have been brought together to start this transformation in the education of health professionals.

This workshop aims to inspire our educational leaders and practitioners by sharing good practice. Attendees will together create solutions to embed this practice across health education.

To book your place: AnneMarie.Sahakian@medschools.ac.uk

