

British Association in Forensic Medicine Student Prize

The British Association in Forensic Medicine (BAFM) offers an annual prize of £250 to medical students from the United Kingdom for what is judged to be the best project on any aspect of forensic pathology carried out during an elective period or short study module.

The period of study can be spent in any recognised forensic pathology unit in the world, although the prize will be awarded for a specific project as opposed to a general review of work experience, and for one set out in no more than 5,000 words in the general form of a scientific presentation with appropriate references. The winner of the prize will be invited to present his or her work at one of the national BAFM meetings, with expenses paid.

Entries should be emailed by 1st August 2017 to Dr Ralph BouHaidar, the Undergraduate Prize Co-ordinator (ralph.bouhaidar@ed.ac.uk), from whom any further information or advice can be obtained.
